

Using Online Sources in an Essay

Prof. Tracy Mendham

November 2, 2005

A Series of Choices: Practice Choosing Online Resources

- The following slides will present screenshots of pairs of Web sites. For each one, try to guess what would be a better choice for finding resources for an academic essay.

A. Google...

The screenshot shows a Microsoft Internet Explorer browser window with the title "reality tv - Google Search - Microsoft Internet Explorer". The address bar contains the URL "http://www.google.com/search?hl=en&q=reality+tv". The search results page displays the Google logo and the search term "reality tv". The results are categorized into "Web" and "Sponsored Links".

Another Pair of Googles:

A. Google Scholar

B. Google News

The screenshot shows the Google News homepage in a Microsoft Internet Explorer browser window. The browser's address bar displays the URL <http://news.google.com/nwshp?hl=en&tab=wn&q=>. The page features the Google News logo, navigation links for Web, Images, Groups, News, Froogle, Local, and more, and search buttons for "Search News" and "Search the Web". A sidebar on the left lists categories like World, U.S., Business, and Sports. The main content area displays "Top Stories" for the U.S., including articles such as "Democratic Sen. Ben Nelson Praises Alito" and "Blair names Hutton as new minister". A right-hand column offers "Customize this page" and lists related news items like "Greenspan lifts US rates to 4pc" and "Microsoft's 'Live' debut and dead air". The bottom of the page shows regional navigation for "World" and "U.S." and a taskbar with several open applications.

Answer

- It's a toss-up
- Google Scholar will generate good material, but much of it may be inaccessible or in a foreign language.
- Google News will generate a greater number of usable hits.
- I suggest using both; just shop wisely as you look at hits on Google News.

Fox & Postal Service Team Up For Dear Santa Reality Show, Vonzell Solomon To Sing On Accompanying CD

FOX, Lions Gate Television and Full Circle Entertainment, in cooperation with the United States Postal Service, have struck a deal for an hour-long unscripted holiday special, entitled Dear Santa, to premiere on FOX December 9 at 8:00pm ET/PT. The announcement was made today by Ed Wilson, President Fox Television Network; Kevin Beggs, President, Programming and Production, Lions Gate Television; Robert Riesenberg, President and CEO of Full Circle Entertainment; and John E. Potter, Postmaster General and CEO of the U.S. Postal Service.

Fear, TV news, and the reality of crime
Chiricos, T; Padgett, K; Gertz, M
Criminology [Criminology]. Vol. 38, no. 3, p. 755. Aug 2000.

Data from a 1997 survey of 2,250 Florida residents are used to assess whether and how the reality of crime influences the relationship between watching TV news and fear of crime. Local crime rates, victim experience, and perceived realism of crime news operationalize the reality of crime and are included in ordinary least squares (OLS) estimates of the TV news and fear of crime relationship. These measures of reality are also used as contexts for disaggregating the analysis. Local and national news are related to fear of crime independent of the effects of the reality of crime and other controls. Local news effects are stronger, especially for people who live in high crime places or have recent victim experience. This contextual pattern of findings is consistent with a conclusion that TV news is most influential when it resonates the experience or crime reality of respondents.

Biggest Loser scale is fake; contestants are weighed before the weight-in ceremony

Every week on The Biggest Loser, contestants weigh in on a big magic scale. The scale isn't very nice, as it taunts the contestant before delivering the actual weight. Does she weight 190? 175? 210? 140? Does he weight 350? 325? 290? 305?

Reality TV in the digital era: a paradox in visual culture?

Arild Fetveit
University of Oslo, Norway

The simultaneous proliferation of digital image manipulation and reality TV seems somewhat paradoxical. The death of photography is proclaimed at a time when the use of cameras to produce visible evidence is approaching an all-time high. This coexistence, it is argued, testifies to a transmutation within our visual culture. The credibility of photographic discourses has become less dependent upon common technological features and more based upon institutional warrant related to specific practices within new media. This is partly as a symptom of unsettled issues in this transmutation. More precisely, it might express a longing for a lost touch with reality, prompted by the undermining of indexicality.

Reality television

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia.
(Redirected from Reality tv)

Reality television is a genre of television programming which generally is unscripted, documenting actual events over fiction, and featuring "ordinary" people over professional actors. Although the genre has been featured since the early years of television, the current explosion of popularity dates from circa 2000 (particularly from Survivor). Critics of the genre have claimed that the term is a misnomer, as many reality TV shows put the participants in exotic locations and/or abnormal situations, thus not promoting a sense of "reality." According to the Nielsen Media Research, reality shows account for about 56% of all of American TV shows (both in cable and broadcast), and also accounts to about 69% of all of the world TV shows (in cable and in broadcast).

Origins of reality television

Though there were earlier precedents on radio and television, the first reality show in the modern sense was probably the PBS series An American Family. Twelve parts were broadcast in the United States in 1973. The series dealt with a nuclear family going through a divorce. An American Family was controversial in its time and excoriated by the press, particularly The New York Times, which published a piece

TELEVISION REVIEW

Feel-good 'Random' has deliberate impact

By Matthew Gilbert, Globe Staff | November 1, 2005

Between "My Name Is Earl" and the new feel-good reality series "Random 1," TV has a rising sub-genre. With its scruffy, B.O.-scented angels, call it "Touched by a Slacker" programming.

How many conversations have you had, or overheard, about the passivity of today's youth? As the argument goes, and has gone since the 1960s, kids feel helpless because of too many global problems and media overload, or they're just tube-numbered narcissists. A&E's "Random 1," which premieres tonight at 10, tries to put the lie to these epic generalizations. Its guerilla team of young, unwashed Robin Hoods swoop into a city, commit a random act of kindness, and move on. They're not political activists, but they are clearly trying to change the world, one life at a time.

Fitness guru Andre Miller and documentary filmmaker John Chester are the two chief members of the Random 1 organization, which they began in the mid-1990s. Initially, the two men helped strangers on their days off, eventually they began filming their adventures and expanding

Do-good reality television is the E-ZPass of altruism. Deer Tape Their Private Moments

By JOHN SCHWARTZ
Published: November 1, 2005

Scientists at the University of Missouri have placed cameras on deer, turning them into roving videographers.

The goal is a new kind of reality TV. Not "America's Most Hunted" or "Does Gone Wild," but an exceptionally close observation of animals in their natural habitats.

The researchers, who did much of their original work within the Missouri Conservation Department, performed a preliminary test

abc NEWS

KABUL, Afghanistan, Oct. 8, 2005 — A man and a woman talk on TV about ordinary problems.

"This letter is from a housewife in Herat," the female host says. "She wants to know why there's so much hostility in her family."

A licensed psychologist fields that question and others on a TV show that has the production values of "Wayne's World." But in Afghanistan, it's groundbreaking stuff.

"Women's problems, aired on television, in itself is revolutionary," says Saad Musaini, who runs Tolo TV, one of a handful of media companies now challenging Afghan culture.

"It's not cutting edge by Western standards," he adds. "But to actually have a man and a woman on air, in a very casual sort of manner that reflects that the two see each other as equals, that says a lot more than a 40-minute speech."

Four years ago, under the Taliban, women were not allowed to show their faces in public and television was illegal. Now, Tolo broadcasts in all five of Afghanistan's major cities.

"Television is one way that Afghans can get connected to the rest of the world, [to] reconnect Afghanistan to the global community," Musaini says.

'Important to Shock People'

Tolo has a nightly newscast and hard-hitting documentaries with graphic images on issues like suicide bombings.
