

Dear Professor Mendham--

I have several of your former College Writing II students in my Reason and Romanticism class. I must tell you that their skill levels far exceed my expectations. Typically my students are not that bright but the ones from your class are very well informed. I can tell you that they learned what the difference between good and not so good sources are. They can arrange the subject matter in a clear and coherent manner. They are also knowledgeable about the MLA format. I, unfortunately, use APA but that's not their fault. Your students have proven to be critical thinkers who can back up their formidable points with solid research. I can tell your students have taken the most they possibly could have from College Writing II.

Signed,

*Professor Harry Butticks
Instructor of Reason and Romanticism*
